

“It makes sense, my crops put food on my table and pay my bills, so why shouldn’t they do the same for the children’s home?”

Hope Haven, a new transitional living duplex at Baptist Children’s Home, Oklahoma City, is pictured above with the first resident, Laura and her children, with retired OBHC President Tony Kennedy.

This home was provided through a gift of corn from two farm families working together.

Farmers and ranchers have played a vital role in providing for the needs of children at Oklahoma Baptist Homes for Children (OBHC) since 1903 by sharing crops and livestock with the children in care of OBHC. With harvest underway, farmers are challenged to donate 10 acres of crop production to OBHC. It doesn’t matter what the crop is or how much it produces per acre. Everything helps.
